

ZERO TO FIRST CLIENT

The 30-Day Guide to Launching Your AI-Powered Freelance Business

Practical steps, ready-made templates, and a daily plan

No experience and no big budget required

First Edition

Important Disclaimer

This guide is educational and practical. Its goal is to give you a clear plan and working tools. It does not guarantee any specific income or number of clients. Results depend on your effort, your niche, the quality of your work, and the market you operate in.

- AI tools, their plans, and their prices change constantly. Always check their current terms before relying on them.
- Numerical examples in this guide are illustrative only. They are not fixed prices or market averages.
- The legal and financial templates are general starting points, not legal or tax advice. Check the business-registration and tax requirements in your own country.
- You are responsible for reviewing every deliverable before it reaches a client.

How to Use This Guide

The guide follows a 30-day path in six modules that mirror how real client work unfolds: you choose your service, master your tools, build your packages and samples, reach your first client, then deliver and grow.

- Read one module, then apply it before moving to the next. Reading alone does not create a client.
- Every module ends with a hands-on assignment. That is the most important part.
- Use the included appendices: ready-made prompts, a service contract, a quotation template, and the 30-day checklist.
- If you fall behind by a day, pick up where you stopped. Do not start over.

Introduction: Why This Guide?

In recent years AI tools have spread to almost everyone. Yet only a small number of people have turned them into a service that clients actually pay for. The reason is not a shortage of tools. It is the missing path between the tool and the client.

People who build steady freelance work with these tools share a few simple habits. They know exactly who they serve. They offer a result that can be described in one sentence. They review their work carefully. And they reach out to prospects consistently. None of this requires a degree or large capital. It requires discipline and a method.

This guide gives you the method. The discipline is yours to add. Our promise is not quick riches. It is something more honest and more useful: clear steps, ready-made templates, and a plan to get you to your first real proposal for a real client within 30 days.

Module 1: The Foundation. Choose Your Service and Your Client

Module Goal

To leave with one specific service, one client segment, and one clear promise statement that sums up what you offer.

1.1 How People Actually Earn With AI

The biggest mistake beginners make is selling the tool instead of the result. A restaurant owner does not care which AI model you use, and will not pay you because you "know ChatGPT." They pay because they have a problem: no time to write posts, weak content, or slow replies to customers.

A Quick Comparison

Weak offer: "I use AI to write content."

Strong offer: "I prepare a full month of ready-to-post content for your restaurant in 3 days."

The difference: the second describes a result and a timeframe. The first describes a method.

In this work AI is an assistant that increases your speed, not a replacement for your thinking. You understand the client, choose the direction, review the quality, and take responsibility. The tool saves you time on drafts, ideas, and formatting.

1.2 The Service Selection Formula

Choose your service where three things overlap:

- What you enjoy or do well: language, writing, design, organizing, selling, explaining. You will repeat it often.
- A problem people pay to solve: wasted time, weak sales, exhausting work, uneven quality.
- AI can speed it up: the tool genuinely removes hours from your workflow.

Here are five services that suit beginners, with the typical client for each:

Service	Typical Client	Problem Solved	What You Deliver
Social media content	Restaurants, shops, clinics, coaches	No time or ideas to post	Ready posts and a posting plan
Translation and proofreading	Websites, stores, small companies	Weak or untranslated text	Translated, polished text
Presentations and documents	Professionals, students, startups	Disorganized, unprofessional files	Decks, resumes, documents
Customer replies and support	Online stores and small businesses	Slow, repetitive replies	Reply templates and chat scripts

Service	Typical Client	Problem Solved	What You Deliver
Summaries and reports	Researchers, managers, trainers	Long texts nobody has time to read	Summaries and structured reports

The Service Test: Three Questions

- Do I know real people or businesses who have this problem?
- Can I deliver good work in this service within two weeks from now?
- Does the need repeat monthly, so a one-off project can become a long-term client?

If you can answer "yes" to all three, you have found your service. If any answer is "no," choose another.

1.3 Choose Your Client: Specialization Raises Your Value

If you say "I serve everyone," you find no one. Pick one segment at the start. Specialization makes many things easier: you learn their language and problems, write sharper outreach, build a reputation faster, and justify a higher price.

Ask yourself about the segment you are considering:

- Are they online where I can reach them (Instagram, Facebook, LinkedIn, Google Maps)?
- Do they have a budget, even a modest one, for marketing or services?
- Is the owner the decision-maker, or would I have to go through several people?
- Do I understand their field well enough to write for them with confidence?

Examples of narrow niches: "Instagram content for small restaurants," "WhatsApp replies for clothing stores," "monthly reports for clinics." Notice that each combines a service with a segment.

1.4 Your Promise Statement

Your promise statement is the most important sentence in your business. Write it in this format:

The Formula

I help [client segment] achieve [specific result] in [timeframe] without [the obstacle they fear].

- I help small restaurants post consistently on Instagram in 3 days a month, without spending hours thinking and writing.
- I help clothing stores reply instantly to WhatsApp inquiries, without hiring an extra employee.
- I help coaches turn long lectures into ready summaries and posts within two days.

Do not promise what you do not control, like "I will double your sales." Promise what you do control: deliverables, timeline, and quality.

1.5 Quick Market Research (One Hour)

Before setting packages and prices, understand what is happening around you:

- Find 5 people or companies offering a similar service in your country or language.
- Note what they offer, how they present it, and their prices if visible.
- Look for gaps: speed? specialization? quality? communication? That is where you can stand out.
- Keep the results in a simple table. You will need it for pricing in Module 3.

1.6 Common Mistakes at This Stage

- Hopping between services: changing your mind every two days means you master nothing. Stick to one service for at least 30 days.
- Choosing a service you dislike just because it is trending: you will burn out quickly.
- Overpromising: it attracts a client and then embarrasses you and damages your reputation.
- Waiting until you feel fully ready: that day never comes. Start small and improve.

Module 1 Assignment

- 1) Write down two candidate services and score each with the three test questions.
- 2) Choose one service and one client segment.
- 3) Write your promise statement using the formula.
- 4) Complete the quick research on 5 competitors and record it in a table.

Module Summary

Sell the result, not the tool • Choose your service where skill + paid problem + AI speed-up overlap • Specialize in one segment • Your promise statement defines deliverables, timeframe, and quality.

Module 2: The AI Tools You Actually Need

Module Goal

To master a small set of tools, learn to write strong prompts, and build a habit of strict review before anything reaches a client.

2.1 The One-Tool Rule

Do not waste weeks testing dozens of tools. Choose one primary AI assistant and go deep, plus a backup for comparison. Mastery comes from repetition, not from a long tool list.

2.2 The Core Toolkit

Category	Use	Notes
Writing and analysis assistant	Drafts, ideas, summaries, translation, replies	Claude, ChatGPT, or Gemini. Choose one as your primary
Design	Posts, decks, covers, portfolio page	Canva works well for beginners
Audio and video	Text-to-speech, short clips	Optional at the start
Management	Track clients, tasks, appointments	Google Sheets or Notion is enough

Prices and free plans for these tools change. Start with free versions and move to paid only when the work pays for it. Always check each tool's commercial-use terms.

2.3 The Art of Writing Prompts

The quality of what you get depends on the quality of what you ask. A strong prompt has six elements:

- Role: "You are a content marketer specializing in restaurants."
- Context: Who is the client? Who is their audience? What is the goal? What is the tone?
- Task: What exactly do you need?
- Format: A table? A list? Word count? Language and voice?
- Examples: Show one you like and one you want to avoid.
- Constraints: What to avoid, maximum length, banned words.

Example: A Weak Prompt and a Strong Prompt

Weak: "Write posts for my restaurant."

Strong: "You are a professional content marketer. Write 7 Instagram posts for a small neighborhood restaurant serving traditional dishes, aimed at local families. Tone: warm and friendly. Each post under 60 words, with a call to action (visit or order). Avoid exaggeration and false promises. Give me the posts in a table: day, text, suggested image."

2.4 Iterative Dialogue: Never Accept the First Attempt

The first output is a draft. Quality comes from successive refinement. After the first result, ask for specific changes instead of starting over:

- "Cut the second paragraph in half while keeping the idea."
- "Make the tone more conversational and less formal."
- "Add a realistic example from the [industry] field."
- "Give me 3 alternatives for the first headline in different styles."
- "What are the weaknesses in this text? Then rewrite it after fixing them."

2.5 Review: Your Most Important Skill

AI tools can make mistakes, and can produce information that sounds convincing but is wrong. Never deliver work you have not reviewed yourself. Use this checklist:

- Facts: Is every claim, number, and name correct? Verify with a reliable source.
- Names, dates, and prices: small errors here destroy client trust.
- Tone: does it fit the client's brand and audience?
- Repetition and filler: delete anything that adds no value.
- Originality: do not copy protected text, and do not deliver text that closely mirrors another source.
- Fit: does it achieve the goal the client actually asked for?

2.6 Privacy and Professional Integrity

- Do not enter sensitive client data (ID numbers, financial details, trade secrets) into a public tool without permission and an understanding of the tool's terms.
- Be transparent: there is no need to hide that you use AI. What the client buys is your expertise, judgment, and quality. The contract clause on this protects you.
- Respect intellectual property: do not use images, fonts, or music without confirming their commercial license.
- Do not pose as an expert where you are not: for medical, legal, or financial topics, write general content and have a qualified professional review it.

2.7 Your Prompt Library and Workflow

Good prompts are a valuable asset. Save every prompt that works in one file (Notion or a document), organize it by service, and refine it after each client. Here is a simple, repeatable workflow for any task:

- 1. Receive the client's information (the brief) clearly.
- 2. Write a strong prompt and get the first draft.
- 3. Improve it through two or three rounds of dialogue.
- 4. Review with the six-point checklist.
- 5. Format and deliver.

Module 2 Assignment

- 1) Choose your primary assistant, then open a Canva account and a client-tracking sheet.
- 2) Try 5 prompts from Appendix 1 on your service and rate the quality with the six-point checklist.
- 3) Build your prompt library: 10 prompts adapted for your client segment.
- 4) Complete one full practice task and review it as if it were for a real client.

Module Summary

One primary tool is enough • A strong prompt defines role, context, task, format, examples, and constraints • The first attempt is a draft • Review matters more than generation • Protect client data and respect rights.

Module 3: Building Three Ready-to-Sell Packages

Module Goal

To turn your service into three clear packages with considered prices and defined limits, so the client knows exactly what they will get.

3.1 Why Packages?

A new client does not know what to ask for or how much to pay. When you present ready-made packages, you simplify their decision, protect your time from open-ended requests, and offer options for different budgets. The middle package is often the most popular.

3.2 The Three-Package Structure

	Basic	Standard	Premium
Best for	First-time buyers	Clients wanting consistency	Clients wanting a long-term partner
Deliverables (social example)	10 posts	30 posts + weekly plan	30 posts + plan + monthly report
Revisions	1 round	2 rounds	3 rounds
Turnaround	3 days	5 days	Fixed monthly schedule
Payment	One-time	One-time	Monthly subscription

Notice that packages differ in quantity, depth, and follow-up, not in quality. Your quality is constant across all of them.

3.3 How to Price

There are three methods. Combine them:

Method 1: Cost of Time

The Formula

Price = (Hours of work × your target hourly value) + tool costs + 20% safety margin

Illustrative example in placeholder currency units: a package takes 6 hours, your target hourly value is 5 units, and tools cost 2 units. $(6 \times 5) + 2 = 32$, then add 20% for a price of about 38 units. Adjust the numbers to your currency and market.

Method 2: Market Comparison

Return to the competitor table you built in Module 1. Do not be the cheapest of all. A very low price suggests weak quality and drains you. And do not be the most expensive while you have no portfolio yet.

Method 3: Value to the Client

Ask: how many hours does your work save them? What would it cost to hire someone for this? If you save them dozens of hours a month, your reasonable price looks small next to that value.

3.4 Starter Pricing and Launch Offers

- For your first 3 to 5 clients, offer an introductory price in exchange for two clear conditions: a written testimonial and permission to show the work in your portfolio.
- State clearly that the price is introductory and limited, so the client does not expect it to last.
- Raise your price gradually after every few successful clients.
- Do not work for free with no conditions. It teaches people not to value your work.

3.5 Scope of Work

Most freelance problems come from vagueness about what the service includes. So write the following for each package:

- What is included: deliverables by number and type.
- What is not included: for example photography, paid ads, or account management.
- Number of revision rounds, and what counts as a revision versus new work.
- What you need from the client and when, and how delays affect the delivery date.
- Payment: a 50% deposit before starting, the balance on delivery.

3.6 How to Describe a Package

Describe each package in the language of results, not tools. Compare:

- Weak: "10 posts written with AI."
- Strong: "10 ready-to-publish posts that showcase your dishes and invite customers to visit, in a tone that fits your brand, with one round of revisions."

Module 3 Assignment

- 1) Write a name and description for your three packages in the language of results.
- 2) Define what each package includes and excludes.
- 3) Price each package using all three methods and set your starter price.
- 4) Prepare your quotation template and service agreement (Appendices 2 and 3) with your details.

Module Summary

Packages simplify decisions and protect you • They differ in quantity and depth, not quality • Price by time, market, and value • Introductory pricing comes with conditions • Write your scope clearly.

Module 4: Portfolio Samples Without Past Clients

Module Goal

To build three honest, convincing portfolio samples and gather them on one page that introduces you and your services.

4.1 The Problem and the Solution

Clients want to see before they pay. And you, at the start, have no past clients. The solution is not faking it. It is creating honest samples that show what you can do. That is perfectly acceptable as long as you are open about what they are.

A Rule You Never Break

Never attribute your samples to clients who did not exist. Never invent testimonials or result figures. Label them plainly: "Sample project." Honesty builds a reputation that lasts; lies collapse at the first question.

4.2 Three Types of Samples

- A sample for a fictional business: invent a business (a restaurant, a clothing shop, a clinic) and complete a full piece of work for it in your service, labeled as a sample.
- A sample for a nearby business, with permission: a friend, relative, or local shop lets you do a small job in exchange for showcasing it. Get their approval in writing.
- A "before and after" on material the owner gives you: they hand you a weak text or post to improve, and you show the difference with their permission.

Choose three samples of different types, each showing a different side of your skill.

4.3 The Structure of One Sample

Present each sample in four short parts:

- Context: who the business is (or that it is fictional) and what their goal is.
- Challenge: what problem you set out to solve.
- What I did: the service and steps, briefly.
- Deliverables: images of the finished work, or before and after.

4.4 Your Portfolio Page

Gather your samples on one simple page in Canva or Notion so you get a link you can share. A suggested structure:

- About me: two unpretentious paragraphs stating your client segment and promise statement.
- My services: the three packages with descriptions (and prices, or "starting at...").
- My work: the three samples.

- How I work: a short list of steps: contact, proposal, deposit, work, delivery.
- Contact me: one or two clear ways to reach you.

4.5 Your Online Presence

- Use a clear photo or simple logo, and the same name across all platforms.
- Write a short bio containing your promise statement and a way to contact you.
- Post weekly: a tip or a sample from your work. Anyone who visits your profile should find evidence that you are active.
- Link everything to your portfolio page.

4.6 Common Mistakes

- Over-preparing: a "good" sample finished today beats a "perfect" one a month from now.
- Showing everything: three strong samples beat ten mediocre ones.
- Over-designing: clarity matters more than decoration.
- Claiming what is untrue: it costs you trust and exposes you to accountability.

Module 4 Assignment

- 1) Choose three samples (fictional, with permission, before and after) and complete them within a week.
- 2) Describe each using the four-part structure.
- 3) Build your portfolio page and get the link.
- 4) Update your profile bio and add the link.

Module Summary

Samples come before clients • Honesty is a requirement • Three varied samples are enough • One clear page with a link • A consistent, regular online presence.

Module 5: Landing Your First Client and Negotiating

Module Goal

To reach prospects through a clear system, turn conversations into proposals, and handle objections with confidence and respect.

5.1 The First-Client Mindset

Reaching clients is a game of numbers and patience. Many messages will be declined or ignored, and that is normal. It does not mean your work is bad. Every message is practice that sharpens your approach. What is required of you: a reasonable volume of good outreach done consistently, tracking your results, and improving continuously.

5.2 The List of 50 Businesses

Do not send random messages. Build a list of 50 businesses that match your client segment, from these sources:

- Google Maps: search your category in your city.
- Instagram and Facebook: active accounts with weak or inconsistent content.
- Your personal network: friends and relatives who own businesses or know owners.
- Niche Facebook and WhatsApp groups for your segment.

For each business, record in your sheet: name, contact method, one specific observation about a weakness or opportunity, and the date you reached out. The specific observation is what makes your message different from mass messages.

5.3 The First Message

Four rules for every successful outreach:

- Personalized: mention something real you noticed about their business.
- Short: under 60 words.
- Offers value: an idea or a small sample.
- Ends with a simple question: one that is easy to answer with yes or no.

Template 1: Instagram or WhatsApp Message

Hi [Name], I've been following [Business] and I really liked [specific real detail]. I noticed that [specific observation, e.g., your posts are spaced far apart]. I put together 3 post ideas that suit your business as a free trial. Would you like me to send them?

Template 2: Email

Subject: A quick idea to improve [specific thing] at [Business]

Hi [Name],

I work with [type of businesses] on [result]. I noticed that [Business] [specific observation]. I attached a simple example of how this could be improved. If you like it, I'd be glad to talk for five minutes.

Best regards, [Your name] – [portfolio link]

Template 3: Outreach Through a Mutual Contact

Hi [Name], [Mutual Contact] suggested I reach out. I work on [service] for businesses like yours, and I'm looking for a business to try introductory pricing with in exchange for a testimonial. Would that interest you?

5.4 The Small Free Sample

A small free offer builds trust, but define its size so it does not drain your time:

- Three personalized content ideas, one improved post, or a short translated paragraph.
- Something that takes you under half an hour.
- Never hand over the full work for free. Give a sample that makes them want the rest.

5.5 Follow-Up

Most deals are won after the follow-up, not after the first message. A suggested schedule:

Timing	What you do
Day 0	Send the first message
Day 3	Short, friendly follow-up: "Just making sure my message reached you"
Day 7	New value: a different idea or tip
Day 14	Final polite note: "I'll leave it with you whenever the timing suits"

Follow-Up Template

Hi [Name], I'm back with one more idea that fits [Business]: [idea]. If you'd like me to prepare a full plan along these lines, I'd be happy to. And if the timing isn't right, no problem at all.

5.6 The Discovery Conversation

When someone shows interest, do not quote a price straight away. Ask first to understand their need. An offer built on understanding is far more convincing:

- What is your biggest challenge right now in [area]?
- How are you handling it today?
- What result would you like to see over the next month?
- Who makes the decision on this kind of service?
- What budget range do you set aside for this?

After listening, present the best-fitting package briefly, and tie each point to what they told you.

5.7 Handling Objections

Objection	How to respond
"It's too expensive"	Ask: "Expensive compared to what?" Then offer the Basic package or reduce the scope rather than cutting the price. Quality stays constant; scope is what changes.
"I'll think about it"	Say: "Of course. What would you like to be sure of before deciding?" This often surfaces the real objection. Then set a follow-up date.
"I already have someone"	Say: "Great, I wish you well. If you ever need extra support, I'm here." Leave the door open.
"I don't trust AI"	Explain: "I use it for drafts and to save time, and I review and edit everything myself. You get controlled quality and faster delivery." Offer a sample to try.
"Can I try it for free?"	Offer a small sample as in 5.4, then a package at an introductory price. Do not work without payment and conditions.

5.8 From Yes to Agreement

- Send the quotation (Appendix 3) after the conversation, with one or two packages, no more.
- Ask for the 50% deposit before starting. It shows seriousness on both sides.
- Send the simple agreement (Appendix 2) for the client to sign, making sure scope, revisions, and delivery date are clear.
- Start work after receiving the deposit and the required information.

5.9 Track Your Numbers

Record weekly: messages sent, replies, conversations, proposals, deals. These numbers show you where the problem is:

- Many messages, few replies: the issue is your first message or who you are targeting.
- Many replies, few proposals: the issue is your discovery conversation.
- Many proposals, few deals: the issue is price, follow-up, or clarity of the offer.

Do not expect any particular rates. They vary greatly by field and market. What matters is that your numbers improve week after week.

Module 5 Assignment

- 1) Build your list of 50 with a specific observation for each business.
- 2) Customize the first-message template and send 5 messages a day for a week.
- 3) Apply the follow-up schedule and log the replies.
- 4) Prepare your responses to the five objections in your own words.
- 5) Send a quotation to your first interested prospect.

Module Summary

A targeted list • Short personalized messages with value and a question • Regular follow-up •
Discovery before the offer • Calm answers to objections • Deposit and agreement before starting •
Track your numbers.

Module 6: Delivery, Growth, and Recurring Income

Module Goal

To deliver your first project professionally, earn a testimonial and referrals, turn a happy client into a monthly relationship, and lay a professional foundation for growth.

6.1 The Stages of Any Project

- Intake: gather the information (the brief) clearly.
- Production: using the workflow from Module 2.
- Self-review: with the six-point checklist, and read the work through the client's eyes.
- Delivery: organized, with a clear message.
- Revisions: within the agreed rounds.
- Wrap-up: ask for a testimonial and suggest the next step.

6.2 The Client Brief

Do not start before you have answers to these questions. Send them to the client as a form or message:

- What does your business do, in detail, and who is your target audience?
- What is your most important goal for this work?
- What tone do you want (friendly, formal, playful)?
- What words or topics should I avoid?
- Do you have examples of work you liked, and work you disliked?
- What materials will you provide (logo, colors, photos, product details)?
- What is your deadline, and are there important dates?
- Who will approve the work?

6.3 Professional Delivery

- Deliver files organized and clearly named in one folder.
- Include a brief message explaining what you delivered and how to use it.
- Tell the client how many revision rounds remain and when to request them.
- Do not release the final source files before payment is complete.

Delivery Message Template

Hi [Name], it was a pleasure working with you. I've attached [deliverables] at this link, ready to use. You can request [number] round(s) of revisions within [number] days. I'd love to hear your thoughts after you review it.

6.4 Managing Revisions and Difficult Clients

- Ask for revisions in writing and grouped in one message, not scattered.
- Distinguish between a revision (an improvement within scope) and new work (outside scope), and price the latter.
- When the discussion drifts, gently return to what you agreed in the contract.
- Stay calm and respectful, and address the work, not the person.
- If agreement becomes impossible, end the relationship politely under the termination clause. Not every client is right for you.

6.5 Testimonials and Referrals

Your strongest marketing is a satisfied client. Ask for two things right after delivery:

- A short written testimonial you can post on your portfolio page (with their permission).
- A referral to someone they know who could benefit from your work.

Testimonial and Referral Request Template

I really enjoyed working with you. If you feel the work deserves it, would you be willing to write two lines about your experience so I can add them to my portfolio page? And if you know a business that could benefit from this kind of service, I'd be glad to reach out to them.

6.6 From One Project to Recurring Income

The most stable income comes from clients who stay with you. After a successful project, offer the monthly package:

- Define exactly what you provide each month (number of posts, a report, a short call).
- Price it slightly below the sum of separate projects in exchange for commitment.
- Agree on a term of at least three months if possible.
- Send a brief report at the end of each month showing what was done and the plan for the next.

6.7 Turn Repetition Into Templates

Any task you have repeated three times is ready to become a template: a reply template, a report template, a prompt template, a content-plan template. Templates cut your time, so your earnings per hour rise without raising prices.

6.8 The Professional and Financial Foundation

- Separate your finances: a dedicated account or wallet for your work, so you know your income and expenses clearly.
- Record every transaction: client, service, amount, date, payment status.
- Learn your country's requirements: business registration, taxes, and rules for payments and transfers. They vary widely, so consult a local professional.
- Keep copies of contracts, quotations, and important messages.

- Set aside part of your income to cover tools, taxes, and slower months.

6.9 Your Plan for Month Two

- Refine your packages and prices based on your real experience.
- Add a new sample from real work, with the client's permission.
- Keep reaching out at a steady rate, even if lower than month one.
- Offer the monthly package to every satisfied client.
- Look for a complementary service you can offer the same client (for example: replies after content).

Module 6 Assignment

- 1) Prepare your brief form, delivery message, and testimonial request.
- 2) Complete your first project through the six stages, and record how long it took.
- 3) Offer the monthly package to your first happy client.
- 4) Create three templates from your repeated tasks.
- 5) Open a simple financial tracking file.

Module Summary

Structured delivery • A brief before starting • Organized handover • Revisions with limits • Testimonials and referrals • A monthly package • Templates that save time • An organized financial and professional foundation.

Conclusion and Next Steps

You have reached the end of the guide, but really you are at the start of your business. What makes the difference is what you do in the coming days, not what you read here.

Remember three things:

- Clarity before tools: a specific service for a specific client with an honest promise.
- Quality before speed: review everything, because you are responsible for what you deliver.
- Consistency before enthusiasm: a few messages every day beat a burst of a week followed by silence.

Start today with the smallest step: open the 30-Day Checklist in Appendix 4 and complete the task for Day 1. After a month, review what you achieved, improve it, and run the cycle again. Good luck.

Appendix 1: 50 Ready-to-Use Prompts

How to use: copy the prompt, replace what is inside the brackets [] with your client's details, then send it to your AI assistant. Review every output yourself before delivering it, and double-check names, numbers, and facts.

Service 1: Social Media Content

#	Prompt
1	You are a professional content marketer. Write 7 Instagram posts for a [type of business] aimed at [audience], in a [friendly/formal] tone. Each post under 60 words, ending with a call to action.
2	Suggest 30 content ideas for a full month for a [type of business], split across: educational, entertaining, promotional, and customer stories. Present them in a table.
3	Write 5 attention-grabbing hooks for a short video (Reel) about [topic]. Each hook no longer than 10 words.
4	Turn this paragraph into a persuasive LinkedIn post in a storytelling style, with a strong first line and a closing that invites engagement: [paste text].
5	Write a 30-second short-video script presenting [product name] to [audience], in this structure: problem, solution, proof, call to action.
6	Suggest 20 suitable hashtags for a [type of business] in [city/country], grouped into: broad, medium, and niche.

50	Review this summary and compare it with the original text, and flag any inaccurate, added, or omitted information: [original + summary].

Tip

Save your successful prompts in a private file and refine them after each client. That is your library, and it raises both your speed and your quality.

Appendix 2: Simple Service Agreement

Note: this is a simplified, general template, not legal advice. Adapt it to your arrangement and your local law, and have a qualified professional review it for larger amounts.

Agreement date: ____ / ____ / ____

1. Parties

Party 1 (Service Provider): Name: | Email: |

Phone:

Party 2 (Client): Name/Business: | Email: | Phone:

2. Purpose and Scope of Work

The Service Provider will deliver the following service: The scope covers only: Any work outside this scope must be agreed in writing and priced separately.

Appendix 4: The 30-Day Checklist

Tick the box as you complete each task. Do not move to the next before finishing the one before it. If you miss a day, complete it without stopping. Consistency matters more than perfection.

Week 1: Foundation

Day	Task	Done
1	Write your "My service + my client + their problem + my promise" sheet in one sentence.	☐
2	List your skills and interests, and mark those tied to a problem people pay to solve.	☐
3	Choose one service from the five, or one close to them.	☐
4	Choose one client segment (restaurants, shops, clinics, etc.).	☐
5	Find 5 similar service providers and note what they offer and their prices.	☐
6	Create a primary AI assistant account, a Canva account, and a client-tracking sheet.	☐
7	Weekly review: are your service and client clear? Adjust as needed.	☐

Week 2: Tools and Packages

Day	Task	Done
8	Try 5 prompts from Appendix 1 on your service and judge the quality.	☐
9	Write your own prompt library (10 prompts) after adapting them.	☐
10	Complete one full practice task and review it carefully as if it were for a real client.	☐
11	Design your three packages: Basic, Standard, Premium.	☐
12	Set your prices after comparing with the market you researched.	☐
13	Create your quotation and agreement templates with your details (Appendices 2 and 3).	☐
14	Weekly review and update your packages and prices.	☐

Week 3: Portfolio and Outreach Start

Day	Task	Done
15	Complete your first sample for a business (real or fictional, clearly labeled).	☐
16	Complete your second sample.	☐
17	Complete your third sample.	☐

Day	Task	Done
18	Gather the samples on one page (Canva or Notion) and get a link.	☐
19	Build a list of 50 target businesses with a contact method for each.	☐
20	Prepare your first-message template, customize it for the first 10, and send the first 5 messages.	☐
21	Send 5 new messages, and log replies in your follow-up sheet.	☐

Week 4: First Client and Delivery

Day	Task	Done
22	Send 10 new messages and offer a small free piece of value to anyone who engages.	☐
23	Follow up with non-responders after 3 days with a short, friendly message.	☐
24	Schedule a call or chat with interested prospects and present the fitting package.	☐
25	Send the quotation and ask for the deposit before starting.	☐
26	Start production (or keep reaching out if you do not have a client yet).	☐
27	Deliver after a careful review, and ask for the client's feedback and testimonial.	☐
28	Monthly review: what worked? What needs to improve? Write your plan for next month.	☐
29	Turn what you repeated into a template, and offer the client a monthly package.	☐
30	Raise your price or package based on your new experience, and start the cycle again.	☐
